

1. Brownfield site	a piece of land that has been used and abandoned, and is now awaiting some new use	15. Teleworking	any form of work in which telecommunications replace work-related travel (commuting)
2. De-industrialisation	the decline in industrial activity in a region or an economy	16. Tertiary industry	the economic activities that provide various services - commercial (shops and banks), professional (solicitors and dentists), social (schools and hospitals), entertainment (restaurants and cinemas) and personal (hairdressers and fitness trainers)
3. Derelict land	land on which factories or houses have been demolished
4. Digital economy	refers to an economy that is based on digital technology, including digital communication network, computers, software, and other related information technologies
5. Enterprise zone	areas designated by the government to promote economic growth, by being able to offer financial benefits such as grants for buildings and machinery and a relaxation of planning regulations
6. Globalisation	the process, led by transnational companies, whereby the world's countries are all becoming part of one vast global economy
7. Green sector	that part of economic activity that pays attention to environmental issues
8. Greenfield site	a piece of land that has not been built on before, but is now being considered for development
9. Homeworking	working from home and using ICT methods to communicate with their place of business or clients
10. Industrial structure	The mix or set of industries constituting the industrial makeup of a region.
11. Overfishing	taking too many fish (or other organisms) from the water before they have had the time to reproduce and replenish stocks for the next generation
12. Primary industry	the economic activities that involve the working of natural resources - agriculture, fishing, forestry, mining and quarrying
13. Quaternary industry	the economic activities that provide intellectual services - information gathering and processing, universities, and research and development
14. Secondary industry	the economic activities that involve making things, either by manufacturing (TV, car, etc.) or construction (a house, road, etc.). The sector also includes public utilities, such as producing electricity and gas		